Jim Hawkins lived with his mother and father in an inn called the ‘Admiral Benbow’. It was in a seaside village in south-west England.

One day, an old seaman arrived at the inn with a big heavy chest. He had a white scar on his face and looked very fierce.

He drank a glass of rum. Then he asked for a room and said:

‘I like it here. It’s quiet and I can watch the ships.’

His name was Billy Bones. Every day he looked out to sea through his brass telescope. He didn’t speak much, but every night he asked the same question:

‘Did any seamen come today?’

One day, he called Jim Hawkins and said:

‘I will give you a penny, my boy, if you tell me when a seaman with one leg comes to this inn.’

‘Of course!’ said Jim, happy to earn a penny. ◻

▶ 1 Months passed but no one-legged seaman came.

Then, one morning in January, a strange man arrived at the inn.

Jim was laying the table for breakfast and looked up as the man came in. His face was thin and grey. Then, Jim noticed his left hand. He had only three fingers.

‘I wonder if Billy Bones will give me my penny for a man with three fingers instead of one leg,’ he thought.

‘Come here, boy,’ said the man. ‘Tell me, is this Billy Bones’ table?’

‘Yes,’ answered Jim, ‘but he’s walking on the cliffs at the moment. You can wait for him here.’

‘Good idea, boy!’ said the man and sat down to wait.

When Billy Bones returned from his walk and saw the man he wasn’t very happy.

‘Black Dog!’ he said. ‘What are you doing here?’

‘Aren’t you pleased to see an old shipmate?’ asked Black Dog.

Jim left the two men to speak in private. Then there was a loud CRASH! When he went back into the room, Billy Bones was lying on the floor and Black Dog was gone.

Luckily, Billy Bones was not dead, but he had to stay in bed for a long time after his fight with his 'old friend' Black Dog.

During this time, Jim cared for the old man and one day Billy said, 'You are always kind to me, Jim, so, now I'll tell you a secret.'

Jim sat on the bed and listened carefully.

'Do you remember Black Dog?'

'Of course!' answered Jim.

'Well, he's a bad man and there are lots more like him who want to see me dead!'

'But why?' asked Jim.

'They want my old sea chest. We were all members of Captain Flint's crew,' he continued.

'Who's Captain Flint?' asked Jim.

'Captain Flint! He was a famous pirate and we had lots of adventures together!'

Jim was so surprised that he couldn't say a word.

'Don't be afraid, Jim, my pirate days are over. But I need your help now. When I die, you mustn't let the others take my sea chest. Promise!'

‘Ok, I promise, but what’s inside the sea chest?’

‘You’ll see when you open it,’ was all Billy said.

One afternoon, a blind man arrived at the inn and asked for Billy Bones. Jim took him to Billy’s table. The two men said nothing, but the blind man gave Billy a note and left quickly.

‘Who was that?’ asked Jim.

But Billy didn’t answer. He looked at the note. His face went very white, then he said:

‘Ten o’clock! Quick, Jim we have six hours...’

He stood up, then fell to the floor... dead!

Jim stared at the dead man, too shocked to cry.

Then he remembered his promise to Billy.

‘The sea chest!’ he exclaimed, ‘Ten o’clock, six hours!’ and he ran upstairs to Billy’s room.

The sea chest was under the window. Jim opened it slowly. Inside there were two pistols, an old Spanish watch, a compass, and some shells.

Then, in the corner of the chest, Jim found a small bag of coins and a long package. He put everything into a bag and thought:

‘I must hide everything before the blind man and his friends come back.’

So, he took his bag and quietly left the inn.

It was night now and there was a full moon. Jim started to walk to the next village. Just as he reached a bridge, he heard a noise and looked back. Not far behind, he could see some men with lanterns. They were coming towards him. He thought quickly. Instead of crossing the bridge, he hid under it.

Soon the men arrived at the bridge. One of them was the blind man.

‘I can’t see the boy anywhere, Pew,’ said one of the buccaneers to the blind man.

‘You’re not the only one!’ exclaimed Pew.

‘We must find him. He has the map that was in the chest,’ continued Pew. ‘Remember, if we find the map, we will be as rich as kings!’

Under the bridge, Jim listened and was scared and excited at the same time.

Then, they heard horses coming from the village. The men ran away and left blind Pew in the middle of the road. The horse hit Pew as it came over the bridge. He died instantly.

The rider, Doctor Livesey, got off his horse.

Livesey was not only a doctor but also a magistrate and Jim knew him well. The doctor took him to his house and Jim told him his story.

‘So, Jim,’ said the doctor, ‘where’s the map?’

‘Here it is, sir,’ said Jim as he gave the doctor the package. The doctor looked at it for a long time but did not open it. Instead he said:

‘You must be hungry, Jim. Stay for dinner!’

‘Oh thank you, sir,’ said Jim.

Mr. Trelawney, the squire, was also at the dinner and while they ate, the two men told Jim the story of Captain Flint.

‘Flint was a terrible pirate. Before dying, he buried his treasure in a secret place,’ they said.

‘But now we have the map, thanks to you, Jim!’ said the doctor.

They opened the package. Inside there was a map of an island with three red crosses and ‘treasure here’ written near one of them.

‘Right, tomorrow I’m going to buy a ship,’ said the squire, ‘and we will sail to the island!’

‘And find the treasure!’ said the doctor and Jim.

การผจญภัย

Mr. Trelawney went to Bristol to buy the ship.

Jim stayed with Doctor Livesey and dreamt of the mysterious island and the buried treasure.

Many weeks passed, then a letter finally arrived for the doctor:

Bristol

3rd March

Dear Livesey,

The ship is ready to start our voyage. Its name is 'Hispaniola'. The people here in Bristol are all very interested in this story about the treasure, and helped me to find the ship.

Then, I met an old sailor with only one leg. His name is Long John Silver. He will be our cook on board – poor man he needed a job. Silver also helped me to find the rest of the crew.

So, come as fast as you can with Jim, so we can start our adventure.

John Trelawney

When Jim heard about the man with one leg, he remembered Billy Bones and felt worried, but he said nothing.

Jim and Doctor Livesey left that evening.

They arrived in Bristol next morning and Squire Trelawney was waiting for them at an inn near the docks. Jim was too excited to eat his breakfast. He sat outside and watched the ships and the sailors at work.

Then, the squire told Jim to go to the 'Spy-Glass' inn with a note for John Silver. Jim walked along the docks until he came to Silver's tavern.

When he entered, he saw a tall man at the bar. The man had only one leg. He was smiling and seemed friendly.

'He doesn't look like an evil pirate, not like Black Dog and the blind man Pew,' thought Jim.

'Excuse me, sir,' said Jim. 'Are you Mr. Silver?'

'Yes,' answered the man. 'How can I help you?'

'I have a letter for you from the squire.'

'Ah, you must be our new cabin-boy,' said Silver.
